

A Forcible Mandate For Corporate Medical Insurance Means The END Of Your Political Career

The health care "debate", such as it has been up to this point, has been nothing but a fraud on the American people. The health care "summit" today was nothing a sham of mutual posturing. The Republicans will not compromise in any way and everyone knew it up front. They know what the Democrats are doing is total political suicide and they want no part of it.

Because for their part the Democrats still seem perversely determined to push through a system to force every American to buy insurance from an artificial new market, with NO option other than a corporate one. The suggestion that small groups might pool together to get better rates is completely phony. No such group would ever achieve the size to have leverage in such a market rigged by giant medical corporations.

President Obama was happy to selectively discuss today the various isolated selling point proposals that poll well. But these are just the most thin of sugar coatings on the most gigantic bitter pill the American people have ever been asked to swallow. Try polling the forced mandate and see what those numbers are if you dare look. And if you try to force it down our throats as is, the political careers of any of you who vote for it are FINISHED, including those who pretend they are liberals.

Those are the stakes. Just so we are clear.
