

Last week President Obama made a speech that tried to suggest that a decision about whether or not to build the climate and aquifer killing Keystone XL pipeline had not been made yet.

That is categorically not true. And the proof of that is that construction on the ALREADY Obama-approved southern leg of Keystone XL continues without even a slowdown. There is no reason to have a southern leg if they were not determined to approve the rest of it, on whatever pretext we may hear later.

We are demanding an immediate moratorium on construction of the Keystone XL southern leg.

Any other action is conclusive proof that the President of the United States has absolutely no intention of rejecting the full implementation of Keystone XL, regardless of the mounting and dire evidence against its approval. Any other action would just represent throwing good money after the worst of the worst.
